Introduction: The Formation and Early Years of the 35th Infantry Division

The 35th Infantry Division, nicknamed the "Santa Fe Division," holds a distinguished place in the annals of World War II history. Officially constituted on 18 February 1918, its origins trace back to the earlier mobilization efforts of World War I. Although it did not see combat during that conflict, the division's subsequent peacetime existence laid the groundwork for its crucial role in the Second World War. Its unique composition, drawn primarily from the Southwestern United States, particularly New Mexico, Colorado, and Arizona, shaped its cultural identity and influenced its fighting style. The division's early years were characterized by training exercises and preparedness drills, crucial steps that formed the bedrock of its wartime effectiveness. This foundation, built upon years of rigorous preparation, would be put to the ultimate test on the battlefields of Europe and the Pacific.

Chapter 1: Training and Preparation: From peacetime to wartime readiness

The period between the two World Wars saw the 35th undergo numerous training evolutions, reflecting the shifting geopolitical landscape. This phase was characterized by a gradual transformation from a primarily National Guard unit to a fully equipped and battle-ready force. The emphasis was on realistic training scenarios mirroring potential combat situations. This period saw the incorporation of new technologies and battle tactics. The men of the 35th honed their skills in marksmanship, fieldcraft, and infantry tactics, preparing themselves for the harsh realities of war. The training regime instilled discipline, camaraderie, and a strong sense of unit cohesion, qualities that would prove invaluable during the intense conflicts to come. The rigorous preparation undertaken during these crucial years significantly contributed to the division's success on the battlefields of World War II.

Chapter 2: The European Theater: Campaigns in Italy and France

Activated for federal service in 1940, the 35th initially served in the European Theater of Operations. Their arrival in Italy in 1944 marked the beginning of intense combat. The division participated in the arduous Italian campaign, facing challenging terrain and tenacious German resistance. They fought in fierce battles along the Gothic Line, contributing significantly to the Allied advance. Their experience in the Italian campaign honed their combat skills in a difficult and demanding environment, preparing them for the future challenges of the war. From the rugged mountains of Italy, the 35th Infantry Division's journey led them to Southern France. Landing in the South of France, they participated in the liberation of France, adding another significant chapter to the Division's history.

Chapter 3: The Pacific Theater: The fight in the Philippines

Following their service in Europe, the 35th was transferred to the Pacific Theater, illustrating the adaptability and versatility of its personnel. Their deployment to the Philippines, a key strategic location, signified a critical shift in their wartime role. The fighting in the Philippines was particularly brutal and protracted. The division faced determined Japanese resistance, resulting in significant casualties on both sides. This experience highlights the division's adaptability in adjusting to different combat theaters and enemy fighting styles. Their actions in the Philippines significantly contributed to the overall Allied victory in the Pacific.

Chapter 4: Key Battles and Engagements: Detailed analysis of pivotal battles

The 35th Infantry Division participated in numerous key battles and engagements, each offering valuable insights into its operational capabilities. A detailed analysis of these battles provides a comprehensive understanding of the division's tactical prowess and resilience. The battles in Italy (such as those along the Gothic Line), the South of France campaign, and the battles in the Philippines provide case studies of the 35th's ability to adapt to diverse terrain and enemy tactics.
