Her passionate diary entries, discovered a century later by her great-granddaughter, Emilia, form the heart of the 1920s narrative. Emilia, a successful but disillusioned historian, is grappling with her own personal crisis – a fractured relationship with her estranged father and a sense of disconnect from her family history. As Emilia pieces together Isabella's life through her diary, she uncovers family secrets that challenge her understanding of her heritage and force her to confront long-held resentments and painful truths.
