We will analyze his story through the lens of resilience, exploring how he navigated trauma, loss, and identity challenges to ultimately find his way home.

Chapter 1: The Lost Boy – The Brutal Reality of Separation

Saroo's journey begins with a catastrophic event – separation from his family at the tender age of five. He was playing near a train station when he fell asleep, inadvertently boarding a train that took him hundreds of miles away from his home in Khandwa, India. This chapter would vividly depict the sensory overload and confusion of a young child lost in the bustling chaos of Calcutta, a city teeming with millions. The narrative would explore the feelings of displacement and alienation he likely felt, even within a supportive environment. His emotional journey would be the focal point – the subtle ways in which he might have felt different from his adoptive siblings, the yearning for his lost family, and the questions about his identity and roots that must have haunted him throughout his childhood and adolescence.

This chapter would focus on the innovative use of Google Earth. The pivotal moment when Saroo used Google Earth to locate his hometown would be a powerful illustration of technological advancements bridging geographical divides.
