Title: Abraham Lincoln con Sombrero: A Journey Through Time and Identity

Logline: A time-traveling Abraham Lincoln finds himself in modern-day Mexico, forced to confront not only the cultural chasm separating his era from ours, but also the enduring struggles of identity, prejudice, and the pursuit of justice across time and borders.

Storyline/Structure:

The novel opens with Lincoln, inexplicably transported to a bustling Mexican marketplace in the 21st century. He's bewildered, his stovepipe hat a stark contrast to the vibrant surroundings. The narrative unfolds through alternating timelines: Lincoln's experiences navigating modern Mexico (his attempts to understand cell phones, traffic, and social media are comedic yet insightful), and flashbacks to key moments in his life and presidency, offering a fresh perspective on his struggles with slavery and the Civil War.

He encounters a young Mexican-American historian, Isabella, who recognizes him, though initially dismisses him as a quirky historical reenactor. As their bond deepens, Isabella helps Lincoln understand the complexities of Mexican history and culture, while Lincoln, through his own experiences, offers unexpected insights into the enduring themes of his presidency – equality, justice, and the fight against oppression. The novel explores parallels between the struggles of Lincoln's time and contemporary issues of immigration, identity, and political polarization. The climax involves a journey to discover how Lincoln arrived in the future and whether he can find a way back, all while facing his own unresolved internal conflicts that mirror the broader societal conflicts he encounters.
