Baron Alaric, a nobleman of moderate means and unremarkable achievements, resides in the kingdom of Aerthos. His life is a predictable tapestry woven with courtly dances, polite conversations, and the occasional hunt. He is, to all appearances, an ordinary man, content with his routine. But fate, as it often does, has other plans. The introduction subtly hints at the existence of a hidden world beneath Aerthos, perhaps through folklore, cryptic symbols on family crests, or unusual geological formations often dismissed as mere curiosities. This serves as a foreshadowing device, hinting at the extraordinary adventure that lies ahead for our seemingly ordinary protagonist. The chapter concludes with an incident – a cave-in during a hunting expedition, the discovery of a hidden passage in the family crypt, or a mystical event – that irrevocably alters Baron Alaric's life and thrusts him into the unknown depths beneath his feet.
