Witness Statements: How inconsistencies in phrasing, word choices, and timeline descriptions reveal potential deception. We explore techniques like analyzing pronoun use, tense choices, and the use of qualifiers to identify potential fabrications. Examples could include the analysis of a hesitant witness, a witness who uses too many qualifiers, or someone whose story changes subtly throughout their interview.

Social Media Posts: The digital age offers a wealth of linguistic data. We analyze the language used in social media posts and text messages to identify subtle cues that might reveal a suspect's guilt. This could include examining tone, emojis, and the use of informal language. The analysis would showcase how seemingly innocuous posts can reveal hidden feelings or motivations.

Recorded Conversations: Analyzing the rhythm, pauses, and hesitations in recorded conversations can be as important as the actual words spoken. We explore the techniques used to identify inconsistencies and deceptive patterns in conversations.
